

#	Question	Option A (Kafka Path)	Option B (Dostoevsky Path)
1	Would you change your language, even your gestures, to be understood by others?	Yes, adaptation is survival.	No, I must remain true to myself.
2	Have you ever felt more like a performance than a person?	Yes, I'm always performing.	Only when I hide what I believe.
3	Is survival always more important than honesty?	Yes, I need to live first.	No, truth matters more than survival.
4	If no one understood your pain, would you still try to express it?	No, it's pointless if it's ignored.	Yes, it still needs to be said.
5	Would you rather be seen as civil or true?	Civil — it's safer.	True — even if it's harder.
6	Have you ever been praised for a version of yourself you didn't recognize?	Yes — and I accepted it.	Yes — and it unsettled me.
7	Does becoming part of the system mean you're free from danger—or just watched more closely?	It means safety through obedience.	It means I'm being quietly controlled.
8	If being caged guarantees comfort, would you lock the door yourself?	Yes — comfort is enough.	No — I need to be free, even if it hurts.
9	Have you ever shaped your post or comment just to be understood by the algorithm?	Yes — to remain visible.	No — I try to be sincere.
10	Do you ever feel more legible online than in real life—but less real?	Yes — online I'm a product.	No — I'm more myself offline.
11	If you uncovered a truth that exposed society's deepest illusions, would you risk being cast out to share it?	No — it's not worth the exile.	Yes — even if I'm cast out.
12	Can you live in a world you know is false without becoming false yourself?	Yes — I'll protect myself.	No — I'll live and die by truth.

#	Question	Option A (Kafka Path)	Option B (Dostoevsky Path)
13	Would you break a system built on lies, even if everyone inside it was happy?	No — comfort is better than conflict.	Yes — comfort doesn't justify a lie.
14	Do you feel more ridiculous when you share what you really believe—or when you stay silent?	Sharing — it exposes too much.	Silence — it feels like betrayal.
15	If your inner transformation made you incomprehensible to others, would you still live by it?	No — I want to belong.	Yes — even if no one understands.
16	Which frightens you more: being misunderstood, or being erased entirely?	Being erased — I need to exist somewhere.	Being misunderstood — I want to be seen for who I am.
17	Is truth still worth living for if no one else will live it with you?	No — what's the point if I'm alone?	Yes — truth is still worth it.
18	Have you ever performed outrage or irony online just to be heard?	Yes — sincerity doesn't work.	No — I try to stay honest.
19	Would you still believe in your dream if no one ever liked, shared, or followed it?	No — silence means failure.	Yes — belief isn't about validation.
